The Cuban Missile Crisis, 1962: The Missiles of October

The fallout shelter that was installed in my grade school had no meaning for me without my understanding of what would be needed to survive in our home shelter. Everyone feels that time is running out, and decisions will soon have to be made, in spite of the uncertainties involved, including whether an attack and invasion might virtually guarantee a counterattack with weapons of mass destruction against American interests and allies. The next day, October 27, Khrushchev sent another message indicating that any proposed deal must include the removal of U.
