Thomas Paine Review: History of Democratic Reform: a bibliography

This is seen most graphically in much of the action of Radcliffe's first genuine attempt at a gothic, A Sicilian Romance: characters hurry along from gallery to gallery, each with its doors which have to be got through; then pass into labyrinth after labyrinth only to find themselves in front of yet more doors, which have to be got through; then into the recesses of cavern after cavern, dungeon after dungeon, with yet more doors, only to be confronted by a back stairway back of what? The Corvey library was built during the last half of the 19th century by Victor and his wife Elise, both bibliophiles with varied interests. In 1772, William Ward moved with his wife and young daughter to Bath, where he would manage a china shop partly owned by Wedgwood. Gaston de Blondville, or The court of Henry III : keeping festival in Ardenne : a romance ; St. Alban's Abbey : a metrical tale : with some poetical pieces : Radcliffe, Ann Ward, 1764

Radcliffe depicts the same siege names the same people, focuses on the same political events, understands what was important with the difference that she emphasizes not the fight, heroes and political leaders, but the civilian population, how the people were closely monitored and coerced into say producing such-and-such food; we see the sick, we experience the terror of people first encouraged to flee and then, finding themselves without entry into enemy territory, stuck on a bridge as open targets: two children went mad with fright. Upon reaching the haven, here Languedoc, the text turns heuristic as Adeline gradually calms, exerts control over herself within a sympathetic community, and Radcliffe writes the visionary rapturous landscapes she is so famous for. A crowd of worshippers filled the church of
