Cha guan : Lao, She, 1899

In the pot, the aroma of the warmed leaves was astoundingly sweet, but not at all overwhelming. The dusky red liquor was quite malty and creamy on the tongue.

There was perhaps the mouth feel of a sour apple with a little bit of the texture of chalk. Please refer to Tripadvisor's photo posting guidelines. Their dialogue is full of the wit and humor characteristic of old Beijing.

Cha guan : Lao, She, 1899

May your cups be filled with adventure too! I increased the infusion time to about five minutes at that point and was rewarded with another few delicious cups before I put this tea to bed. As infusions number four and five trickled into our cups, I realized that the leather had faded to the background and the sweetness had come to the fore.

Cha guan (1994 edition)

The liquor is a pale golden-green color with melting-butter texture, uplifting floral notes and mild, succulent flavor. In anycase, I would definitely like to go back.

Cha Guan Teahouse

I would recommend keeping the infusions short for this tea or at least taking care how many leaves are used to avoid being overwhelmed! Even the aroma of the , devoid of any water, is indeed an incense into itself.
