A Poetry of Talking: a Conversation with David...

By the time I got to City College, I learned that the literary world was in a conservative mode. But the nightclub audiences he started from were expecting diversions from the tedium of their lives as they experienced it.

David Antin: The Stranger at the Door

Found within this archive are many long and theoretical exchanges of letters that go on for years. CB: I often get a sense of poetry being disappointing to you, that the failure of poetry to do something it could be doing or doing better was a kind of inspiration for writing poetry well you know that's my current theory, speaking of theories, and I do see you as a particularly good model for it.

When you grow up in a family of languages, you develop a kind of casual fluency, so that languages, though differently colored, all seem transparent to experience. When my mother left her second husband, she wrote her autobiography and presented it to him for his approval.
