Donatello , the first real genius of, reinvented the medium of sculpture in much the same way as Masaccio, Piero della Francesca and Mantegna revolutionized the art of painting. The art of the Eastern Roman Empire, based in Byzantium, was almost entirely religious, but, aside from some shallow ivory reliefs and goldsmithing, the Eastern Orthodox brand of Christianity did not permit 3-D artworks like statues or high reliefs.

History of Sculpture

He had François Girardon reproduce the work that the latter had made representing him on horseback, in a large-scale in marble, because he considered its volutes, curves and counter-curves to be too excessive. Celtic Metal Sculpture 400-100 BCE Let's not forget the Celts - a series of nomadic tribes which emerged from the Caucasus around 800 BCE, and gradually spread westwards across Europe 600-100 BCE as far as the Iberian peninsula, Britain and Ireland. This original and unique work gave rise to reduced copies in bronze produced shortly after the death of the artists.

It is, therefore, so clear that it is unique that this is nearly never referred to in relation to paintings. The successors did not hesitate to increase the number of works produced by the artist while still alive by producing a post-mortem original copy without taking into account copies produced before 1968. Only later in the 18th century did a worthy successor to Canova appear in the person of the Danish sculptor 1770-1844 , who approached the antique with a comparable high-mindedness albeit with less originality.

Thanks to the legislator, who is surely not a sculptor, since 1968 the tax concept of originality was also extended the technical and modeling originality of terracotta sculptures.

History of Sculpture

Louis 16 th, well advised by artists such as Le Brun and Girardon, led the way in freeing them from their early years by unifying production in a baroque style devoid of excessive embellishments. Seven original copies in bronze are recorded as having been cast prior to 1901, to which should be added, from 1902, thirty or so cast by the Alexis Rudier foundry, 11 of which from 1926 to 1945, then eight official copies ordered by the Rodin Museum from Georges Rudier from 1955 to 1969.

Workshop plaster from the overlaying process, a copy in bronze by Eugène Blot, produced by counterfeiters prepared for the production of bronze copies for the sand casting technique. Prior to 1968, the original copy of a sculpture in bronze or any other material was not limited in time or by the number of copies. Being involved in a more expensive art-form than painters, and thus dependent on high-cost commissions, sculptors often found themselves at the mercy of public opinion in the form of town councils and committees.
