New York Times Moscow correspondent wanted: Must believe all conspiracy theories about Russia, hate Putin & ignore facts — RT Russia & Former Soviet Union

Later on he became a journalist working for the BBC during times of great change such as the fall of the Berlin wall. Herein lies a clue as to why highly intelligent and knowledgeable journalists, once they arrive in Russia, all too often seem to lose their ability to think independently, and instead turn into clones, all reporting the same negative stories using the same, very limited number of highly embittered and often discredited sources to pad out their text with suitable quotations.
