The Age of the Unthinkable: Why the New... book by Joshua Cooper Ramo

His focus is on ecological systems that were hit by some sort of unexpected shock and what the response was to the shock Ramo 2000:43. A book attempting to link recent terrorism and upheaval in financial markets to argue swift, significant change is upon us and we are poorly prepared for it. It is one thing to say that the world is complex, that we need new ways at looking at the world, thinking outside of the box, etc.

I feel like this ignores the resilience of markets and institutions as well as the upheavals of past years Russian debt default, Asian currency crisis, LTCM, etc. Now think of the situation with terrorists.

The Age of the Unthinkable

He turns to little-known cognitive scientists, terrorists, ecologists, military leaders, venture capitalists, and other insightful observers in their own fields to illuminate the larger challenge: that the way our brains work and the way we have been taught to think in the West equip us poorly to cope with the emergent properties that inevitably appear when complex systems are tweaked.

Nonfiction Book Review: The Age of the Unthinkable: Why the New Global Order Constantly Surprises Us and What to Do About It by Joshua Cooper Ramo, Author . Little, Brown $25.99 (288p) ISBN 978

. For me, Ramo has a great deal of credibility. Our plans go awry and policies fail.
