Online sphere as semiosphere

Semiosphere is a conditional heterogeneous space of meaning-making (Lotman 2001, 2005).

In the case of the meaning-making in online communication, we can treat particular online communities, blogs, web-pages, postings etc. as individual semiotic units.

"As soon as two monads [semiotic units] make contact, forming a common semiotic mechanism, they proceed from the state of mutual neutrality to the condition of mutual complementarity, structural antonymy, and they start to cultivate their own specific character and mutual contrast" (Lotman 1997: 11)

Starbucks: A Semiotic Analysis

On the other hand, Georges Roque, Jan Baetens, and Alain Eraly this volume all take for granted, in their comparisons of semiotics to other disciplines, that the sign is what defines semiotics. Through such spans of time conversation, even if slow, can create many ideas.

Semiotics in Marketing Communications

In his writings he continuously critiques the tendency to reduce communicative processes to relations between the sender and receiver and between langue and parole, as improperly established by Saussure. These boundaries, however, do not themselves belong to the continuum, neither are they part of the gap.

The Semiotic Sphere

Clearly what differs is not primarily the text, but the context.

THE DECLINE OF THE PUBLIC SPHERE: A SEMIOTIC ANALYSIS OF THE RHETORIC OF RACE IN NEW YORK CITY

This in turn provides the ground for a dramatic generalization of the notion of written sign as well. Due to the possession of code-duality the life sphere and the cultural sphere should be seen as deeply related forming together the sphere which Bateson termed, through inspiration from C.
