How surprised we would be to find natural meadows, forests, and fields growing in rows, with the area between the rows resembling long strips of desert. Ecology Action has built on the work of the Chinese, Mayans, and others by using traditional agricultural techniques that are thousands of years old, discovering the universal scientific principles that underlie them. Number of square feet represents the area that is in surplus, not needed for food production, that could be left in a natural state to preserve plant and animal genetic diversity and ecosystems.

All too often we participate instead in agricultural stripmining.

Nuts

This approximates the way nature adds leaves, flower bodies, and other decaying vegetation to the top of the soil, where they break down and their essences percolate into the soil.
