Both have been expats—Maria in London and Fernando in Vancouver—and have a very unique perspective on intercultural experiences and how to integrate into a new culture.

The Myths of Mexico and Peru

The ancient belief that people's personalities and needs continue unchanged after death leads to the custom of burying possessions and useful objects with the dead. She was pleased by the bright variety of its hues, and placed it in her bosom, intending to offer it up to the sun-god. In 4 months, we barely scratched the surface of this richly historic country and now we are shouting at top of our lungs! There is also the ongoing drug wars that provide a seemingly non-stop stream of sensational, often gruesome headlines.
