While Gregory credited as the central figure in the university's establishment, Gregory, during his tenure as University of Illinois's first president, helped determine the direction of the university by advocating the presence of a classically based liberal arts curriculum in addition to the industrial and agricultural curriculum desired by the and many state residents and lawmakers of the time. Currently, most first-year students with disabilities will live in Nugent Hall, supported by the Beckwith Residential Support Services. Most of his students were from nearby counties.
