Lorde, Age, Race, Class, and Sex: Women Redefining Difference

I conclude that an intersectionality theory well suited for explicating health inequalities in Canada should be capable of accommodating axis intersections of multiple kinds and qualities. The health effects of gender were minimal and the health scores of homosexuals did not differ significantly from those of heterosexuals.

Women, Race & Class by Angela Y. Davis

The women of the sample were slightly more likely than the men to report fair or poor self-rated health, controlling for age, but upon additionally controlling for the other inequality variables gender was not significantly related to self-rated health.

Racism and the Myth of the Black

To allow women of Color to step out of stereotypes is too guilt provoking, for it threatens the complacency of those women who view oppression only in terms of sex.

Sex, race, age, and violent offending

The logistic regression models were applied to the 90,310 respondents with valid information for the age, race, gender, education, household income, sexual orientation, and self-rated health variables.

Sex, Race and Class: The Perspective of Winning: A Selection of Writings 1952

Even so, race, gender, class, and sexual orientation all manifested independent relationships with health at the additive stage of my analysis and each of the four axes intersected meaningfully with at least one other axis, suggesting that all four of these intersectionality axes of inequality were operative for better or for worse in many of the social situations encountered by survey respondents in their everyday lives.

Race, gender, class, and sexual orientation: intersecting axes of inequality and self

Social capital could generate a positive heuristic in epidemiology if its relation to a society's political, economic and cultural structure was made explicit, as in the original writings by Bourdieu and subsequent studies on social class and social capital. Putnam also presents trends on increased litigation, and guard labour although no reference is made to the role of the state in using incarceration as a labour market institution or to the prison-industrial complex.

Sex, Race, and Class is a collection of articles, essays and speeches by anticapitalist Selma James. Black women will know in what organizations with Black men, with white women, with neither to make that struggle. The pieces highlight the theory and praxis of the working class-- waged and unwaged, particularly working class women.
