Bishop of London

Appointed on 12 September and received the temporalities on 2 December 1375.

Apostolic succession

Thus, apostolic succession is necessary for the valid celebration of the sacraments.

Bishop of London

Died in office on 14 January 1901. Very many other major episcopal churches, however-Roman Catholic, Orthodox, Old Catholic, Anglican, Scandinavian Lutheran-do make this claim and contend that a bishop cannot have regular or valid orders unless he has been consecrated in this apostolic succession. Following the establishment of the by the , its leader consecrated as the first bishop to the.

Apostolic succession

Little is known about how the early bishops were formally chosen or appointed; afterwards the Church developed a regularized pattern of selection and ordination of bishops, and from the third century on that was universally applied. The Catholic Church does however question how the ecclesiastical break in the 16th century has affected the apostolicity of the Churches of the Reformation and thus the apostolicity of their ministry. But after the Revolution, his ordaining for American would violate no law of the Church; and when the necessity was clearly apparent, his hesitation ceased.
