The Humanistic Tradition: Prehistory to the Early Modern World by Gloria K. Fiero

I expected more from the text, but there are a few good concise summaries of the cultural shifts during the medieval and Renaissance periods in Europe. Eric Berne's progression of books shows this transition out of what we might call pragmatic psychology of WW II into his later innovation, one of the most influential forms of humanistic of the later 1960s-1970. I'd recommend it for someone interesting in a high level look at the earliest civilizations.
