Identification: Size: This bird is the size of an American Robin or Northern Mockingbird. Most are of generally undistinguished appearance, but many have distinctive songs.

Birding in Oregon

Variable number of white spots on back and wings depending upon location. They are uncommon to common spring and fall transients, primarily offshore, small numbers are regular onshore. Hens are dark brown with a white mask around the base of the bill.

Guide to Oregon Birds

The long, often slightly upturned bill and very long yellow legs make this one of the easier shorebirds to identify despite its subdued, speckled gray and white plumage. In shallow waters it stirs the bottom with its feet or spins rapidly to expose the tiny organisms that it picks up with its needlelike bill.
