Four Inventions of Ancient China: Paper Making, Gunpowder, Printing, Compass

The fluid flows in, filling these negative moulds, one by one becoming type. He even developed an oil-based ink, which was far more resilient than the water-based ink of the time. In this he placed the types, set close together.

Printing and Publishing in Medieval China by Denis Crispin Twitchett

It is thought that American tribes such as the Olmecs and others cultures around the world may have used natural magnetite even 3,000 years ago.

Medieval Papermaking & Printing

For a multi-colour pattern, each colour element is carved as a separate block and individually inked and applied. The investment on the transmission work has increased, yet the results are not obvious. Another example, Chen Si, also called Chen Daoren, once wrote Bao Ke Cong Bian, Shu Yuan Jing Hua and Shu Xiao Shi.

The Invention of Woodblock Printing in the Tang (618)

Both blocks and moveable type printing has been discovered at as well as several hundred wooden type for Uighur. Perhaps other Europeans also used compasses, but they kept the technology secret too. Without easy access to written material, the populace was largely illiterate, and virtually all learning lay in the hands of the Church.

Medieval Papermaking & Printing

For higher efficiency two iron sheets were used, one for fresh typesetting and the other for printing, so that a new plate was ready before the specified number of copies had been made from the previous one.
