1 Corinthians 15

In Romans 21, TERTULLIAN traces the knowledge of Tiberius to a report of Pontius Pilate, and adds that even the emperors would have believed in Christ, if either emperors were not necessary for the world, or if Christians could be emperors.

On this faith being publicly put forth by us, no room for contradiction appeared; but our most pious Emperor, before any one else, testified that it comprised most orthodox statements. Suffering, in a claimed place like Purgatory, is not the kind of good works God created humans for. So what you are saying is, we are now free to murder, steal, committ adultery? Can also be written as te provococo.

By Christ's commanding them to keep silence, it is sufficiently clear they acted contrary to his pur- poses. This omission of any techni- cal precision on such subjects is in exact keeping with the theory of our intellectual probation, for it is required of us as being in such a condition, to exhibit an intellectual, conscientious, and willing obedience to the requirements of Jehovah, as free agents undergo- ing moral discipline before him.

Further, how can a scholar, endowed with sound judgment, write a history of the Christian Gnosis, and make an unheard-of leap from the old Gnostics clear over the whole Middle Ages Scholastics and Mystics , down to Jacob Boehm, with a very superficial touch on Manichæism and on Augustine? He uses Rome as an example of a church whose tradition should be followed.
