Dafoe, John Wesley 1866

Born and raised a , he turned to very early at the start of his career when he worked for various newspapers in , and Winnipeg. Article published January 23, 2008; Last Edited October 05, 2016. To those in particular who charge that he sought place and honor, there is the crushing repartee that Dafoe is one of two editors in Canada—the other being the late John Ross Robertson—to refuse a title.

Dafoe of the Free Press

With his incisive pen and clear reasoning, he raised the Globe to unprecedented prominence. The Free Press had by this time gained a national reputation. He resembles a fireman with an extinguisher rushing from one hot spot to another in the cold war dampening the small fires which are erupting on a world wide scale.
