Bradley is perhaps the most significant half of the Michael Field poetic enterprise: she began writing and publishing before Cooper, kept the production of lyrics going in the 1890s when Cooper focused more on the dramas, and edited and published the final Michael Field volumes after Cooper's death in 1913. Print, Manuscript and the Search for Order 1450-1830. After leaving Cambridge, she published The New Minnesinger under the name of Arran Leigh, a pseudonym that aligned the author with the eponymous feminist heroine of Elizabeth Barrett Browning's Aurora Leigh 1857.

A Mosaic, by Ernest Dowson

Ex library with usual stamps, spine ends slightly frayed, front free end paper torn with some loss. Writings in Honour of Sir Harlod Acton on his Eightieth Birthday.

A Mosaic, by Ernest Dowson

In 1874, Bradley left the family home again to attend Newnham College, Cambridge, as one of the first women admitted to a specially designed set of courses and lectures, though she was excluded from taking a formal degree.
