National Forest Management Act of 1976

Steps of the Wilderness Process provides direction and guidance for the four-step process to be completed as one part of the larger Plan Revision effort.

Siuslaw National Forest

Final Inventory Maps: Final Inventory Maps include all National Forest System areas that are identified to move on to the next step of the process, which is the evaluation of the inventoried lands. Works to accelerate the development and application of agroforestry technologies to achieve more economically, environmentally, and socially sustainable land-use systems. Marita, 1995 The Forest Service issued two land and resource management plans for national forests in Wisconsin that both involved timber harvest.

Planning and NEPA

We look forward to your comments and appreciate you taking the time to help us improve our rangeland management directives! The assessment is the first step in revising the plan that guides management of the forest. The Forest Service rangeland management directives are comprised of Forest Service Manual FSM 2200, Forest Service Handbook FSH 2209.

Public Input

Interested members of the public should review the proposal's information to determine the applicable administrative review process and the eligibility requirements for that process.
