or developed by people who are not thinking but by the best people of California. Thus, the unfounded fear of Japanese Americans turning against the United States was overcome by the reality-based fear of massive economic loss. In some cases, the Japanese American baseball teams from the camps traveled to outside communities to play other teams.

Those who had not left by each camp's close date were forcibly removed and sent back to the West Coast. Thus, while it might cause injustice to a few to treat them all as potential enemies, I cannot escape the conclusion. In 1939, again by order of the President, the ONI, , and began working together to compile a larger.
