GOTTESCHALCUS, monk of Orbais, in the diocese of Soissons, died about 870. Another objection often brought against the Inquisition, both under Isabella and Philip, is, that it crushed the intellect of the Spanish people, and consequently destroyed in them a love and cultivation of learning and science. Alexander cites a theory that the manuscript might have been produced in northern England or even in the because of its similarity in layout and organization to the.

. Eusebius also refers to the ancient tradition of Pauline authorship, and may have known of the tradition that Luke translated a Hebrew original into the Greek language, but does not mention this particular tradition as does his predecessor Clement of Alexander. The writing gives us news of Noetus, a figure in the community of Smyrna after the time of Polycarp and up to the end of the second century on whom we possess little information⁸⁶.
