Emerging States and Economies in Asia: A Historical and Comparative Perspective

The regional distribution of wealth and hence power has undergone enormous changes over the last two centuries: Europe enjoyed its moment of glory in the long nineteenth century, from the post-Napoleonic wars to the Second World War; the U.

The resolution sets standards for the collection and analysis of data on child labour and calls upon all countries to develop a system of child labour statistics. Labor was imported from India and southern China, large-scale immigration that had lasting impact on the demographic structures of areas like Malaya as Sugata Bose writes in his chapter. Africa Now: People, Policies, Institutions, The Hague: DGIS.

Comparative Economic Development

But Singapore with its high-performance technocracy has long proven this assumption wrong. First, there is no comprehensive comparison of the two regions regarding integration to the global economy, which would include the various aspects of the globalisation process, such as trade, industrialisation, FDI and capital flows. Although there is some validity to this argument, it is not clear that specific policies are any more complex than trying to manage the macro economy.

Comparative Economic Development

In the postwar and post-independence era, India opted for the path of capital goods-led import-substituting industrialization. In the future, people may see the rise of Donald Trump as U. Wong notes that those approaches manifest themselves within very different ideological and institutional framework in Communist China.

Project: Asia and Africa in the Global Economy

For most indicators there is a similarity in economic structure between Southeast Asia in 1965 and Africa in 1990. In aiming to catch up with developed nations, the developmental state manages its economic system on the basis of private property rights and a market mechanism, but sets industrialization as their main objective and intervention in the market as legitimate insofar as such intervention is able to achieve the main objective. There has also been in many cases a lack of political commitment to integration, particularly in the years after independence, reflecting concerns about neo-imperialism.
