Finally, the North has continued to work closely with the US since the Agreed Framework in order to recover the remains of US servicemen missing in action MIA from the Korean War. The catastrophic loss of seats by the SDP in the October 1996 House of Representatives and July 1998 House of Councillors elections leaving it with a mere fourteen and twelve seats in both houses respectively may not spell the complete end of SDP influence on the security debate, as under the leadership of Doi Takako it seeks to restructure and re-adhere to its traditional policies.

Without this repatriation, the problem will never be solved at present. During US-North Korea talks in January and March 1994, the North succeeded in bargaining its acceptance of IAEA continuity of safeguard inspections although not special inspections and new North-South dialogue in return for the cancellation of Team Spirit and another round of US-North Korea talks.

The team who made a 2007 NHK documentary on the repatriation, for example, amassed some 15,000 pages of formerly classified documents about the project from around the world. But the depth of interdependence is usually sufficient to mean that disputes are settled by means of political negotiation rather than by military threats.

Japan's Economic Power and Security: Japan and North Korea (Sheffield Centre for Japanese Studies Routledge)

Even though the SDPJ had acknowledged the constitutionality of the SDF the previous year, Murayama in his January 1995 Diet speech persisted with a vision of security unreliant upon military power: The path to peace that Japan should follow is not one for its achievement based upon the exercise of armed force.
