Hill 1991: 127 Limiting acquaintance accounts to self-knowledge of phenomenal states—or, more strictly, self-knowledge of mental states individuated by phenomenology—does not entirely fix their scope, as philosophers disagree as to which kinds of mental states are individuated by phenomenology. When the Self gets confused with body and mind it is overcome by mortal fears. But unlike Byrne, Gallois takes the resulting self-knowledge to meet epistemically internalist conditions for knowledge.
