Wild Turkey Predators

Both Collier and Chamberlain are concerned that an increasing number of hunters and their efforts are leading to a much higher number of mature birds being harvested than in a typical year. The full article, by Johnny Morgan, is available at.

Colorado Parks & Wildlife

Gobblers weigh 17-21 pounds and attain a height of 40 inches. If you would like to subscribe to the print copy, or if you have any questions, or if you want to unsubscribe from this list, please contact the editor, Linda Benedict.

Rockefeller Wildlife Refuge in Cameron Parish. Turkeys deal with predators by having large clutch sizes, by having a large body size, by using flocking behavior, and by roosting in trees at night.

Eastern Wild Turkey

Lively's work is highlighted in a recent article in the Baton Rouge newspaper,. An alternative to predator control may be management that is directed at creating conditions for minimizing predator-turkey encounters while simultaneously enhancing nesting and brood habitat. Of the 23 species of Mycoplasma bacteria known to infect birds, Mycoplasma gallisepticum MG is the most significant to wild species.

Avian Mycoplasmosis

The Big Show: A spring tom in full strut is a sight many Eastern hunters are seeing less of lately. The food web begins with microscopic plants, extends through the various levels of animal, and results in predator-prey relationships.

Life and Times of a Turkey Nest

This was not a problem in fresher water. Not to mention, removing predators from a habitat completely, can off-set the balance of the ecosystem. Various studies indicate 10 to 40 percent of nests successfully hatch.

Habitat Selection of Female Turkeys in a Managed Pine Landscape in Mississippi on JSTOR

Specifically, sediment from the Chandeleur Islands sites has more mineral less organic sediment and is more affected by high-energy waves and storms in contrast to more protected interior deltaic sites. This is costly and becoming prohibitive as the fish is overfished. An alternative to predator control is maintaining quality habitat, which is important in wild turkey management and has been demonstrated to have an impact on predation rate of turkeys.
