Ray Jones books and biography

Martin Barr is in many ways the most interesting of the three, but I should like first to talk briefly about the two others that Coleridge names. One of the first mentions of porcelain by a foreigner was in the Chain of Chronicles, written by the Arab traveler and merchant in 851 AD during the Tang dynasty who recorded that: They have in China a very fine clay with which they make vases which are as transparent as glass; water is seen through them. The company still has this warrant today.
