The White Deerskin dance by the Karuk determined the appropriate time for the Shasta to eat fish. Speaking the name of a dead person was offensive and cause for compensation by Indian Law, therefore the subjects of the photos may have been unwilling to reveal their names. Permanent houses were constructed by the Shasta for the winter.

Clarke Museum exhibit delves into Native American basket design

Four bands of Shasta existed with variations in custom and differing dialects. Their quivers are made of deer, raccoon, or wild-cat skin; these skins are generally whole, being left open at the tail end.
