The politics of nineteenth-century Korea was not heavily dominated by a few selected royal in-law families, at least in terms of who held high-level government posts.

A history of Korean literature

This comprehensive narrative history of Korean literature provides essential information for scholars and students as well as others. However, it can, at least, be very useful to trace the basic background information in order to show why a certain family group emerged within the core of the Chosŏn politics in a certain time period.

A history of Korean literature

Some contemporary popular historians have pointed out that the high military positions occupied by a couple of royal in-laws are another characteristic of politics in nineteenth century Chosŏn Korea. Within its sphere of influence, Goguryeo partially subjugated the , , and Didouyu, and influenced Buyeo, Silla, and Baekje.

When King Sunjo suffered from smallpox, Kim Cho-sun, Pak Chun-wŏn, Pak Chong-bo, and Pak Chong-gyŏng were the only ones called to work in the royal palace by his side. Through this re-examination, this research project will contribute to enlarging the vision of the political history of Korea in the first half of the nineteenth century, which has not been a major research topic among political historians of Korea, who have mainly dealt with struggles and conflicts for political power among various historical agents. Furthermore, as seen by the above two statistical tables, cheating did not allow one or two families to monopolize the recruiting system.
