Laocan, Huancui, and Yiyun all talk of seeing each other someday on the Buddha's Spirit Vulture Peak in the Western Paradise. Flower in the Sea of Retribution, the last of the four great novels to appear, is a book that has a reasonably centralized plot and central characters whose lives serve as the integrative element in the novel's progression. In a vivid language, Liu E depicts scenes full of life, like the two dancing girls in the second chapter, and in a fantastic winter landscape.

The Travels of Lao Ts'an.

Di guo mo ri de shan shui hua : Laocan you ji = The travels of Lao Ts'an : Lee, Leo Ou

We may say that The Travels of Laoan can thus be considered the last classic Chinese novel, in that it illustrates the author's struggle to recapture both in formal and thematic aspects of his work the traditional ideal of a self-contained, self-generating, and self-regulating cosmos. Nevertheless, compared with most traditional Chinese novels, Laocan youji shows greater centralization in plot and in narrative mode.
