Media pluralism 'increasingly under threat across Europe'

The media authorities have strong expertise in broadcasting law, and develop and enforce regulations on a range of media issues including advertising standards, accessibility of audiovisual services, and protection of minors.

The European Union and the Regulation of Media Markets

The author argues that increased European coordination in public interest regulation could be more conducive to growth and competitiveness than the dismantling of existing national laws.

Germany

. In the MPM2020 implementation, only 5 countries score as low risk Denmark, France, Germany, Portugal and the Netherlands.

The European Union and the Regulation of Media Markets

This is 2 percentage points lower than in MPM2017 54% , but is still in a medium risk band. Even if the impact of digital competition affects all of the indicators in the area, the extraction of the score for digital variables can help to better assess the risks that are linked to the online environment.

Structural Media Pluralism

Pending the publication of this report, an unprecedented global crisis, caused by the COVID-19 pandemic, has highlighted and confirmed the key role of independent media systems in democratic societies, and the risks to media pluralism associated with a state of emergency and various restrictions on freedom of expression.
