The reasons for the job cuts were twofold: a drought in western Canada that reduced CN's grain shipping revenue and the efficiency drive that cut the number of locomotives and railcars the company needed, leading in turn to a reduced need for workers. In January 1992, the Agency released an interim report on the accessibility of federally-regulated ferries. The depression was not the only force moving against the CN: new modes of transportation were quickly being developed to compete with the outdated railway system.

The History Behind Canada's National Parks

The Board of Transport Commissioners continued its regular business.
