But the Greek Communist Party soon opted for insurgency. Later on, through political screening of the officers, the Cairo government created the , composed of staunchly anti-communist personnel, under the command of Brigadier. The change of political attitude and the choice to escalate the crisis derived primarily from the conclusion that regime subversion, which had not been successful in December 1944, could now be achieved.

Πεζοπόροι

This was the first and last time that the two major Resistance groups would cooperate, due to the rapidly developing rivalry and ideological retrenchment between them. The first major resistance organization to be founded was the EAM , which by 1944 came to number more than 1,800,000 members the Greek population was around 7,500,000 at that time. Advised by British ambassador , Papandreou demanded the disarmament of all armed forces apart from the and the , which had been formed following the suppression of the April 1944 Egypt mutiny, and the constitution of a National Guard under government control.
