The poems of Charms contain plenty of alexandrines of course, but also hexasyllables, octosyllables, pentasyllables, and heptasyllables. Never has such a glow Shone out in victory As these bright sparks of summer Across a forehead sown with sweat! The poem is not about , but it does try to address the relationships between destruction and beauty, and, in this sense, it resonates with meditations on these matters, especially in the plays of and.
