Know Your Rights

The ADA guarantees this for people with in all aspects of everyday life — from opportunities, to being able to purchase goods and services, to participating in state and local governments' programs and services. Many state and local governments have their own anti-discrimination laws.

Laws Impacting Students with Disabilities

Wasserman and McMahan 2012 question whether those rights could be meaningfully exercised by surrogates for individuals with the most severe intellectual disabilities. Similarly, a person lacking sight or hearing can achieve aesthetic satisfaction by other means; a person with intellectual impairments can participate in activities structured to include individuals of varying cognitive skills. This is epistemic injustice Fricker 2007; Barnes, 2016.
