Drunk Drivers

None of these laws however have been directed specifically at young adults, and recent studies suggest that this population shows a growing trend toward drunk driving. For many years the basic statutory pattern was that a crime involving moral turpitude rendered a person deportable, if it was committed less than five years after the person's entry and resulted in a sentence of one year or more confinement. Those monies are supplemental to any other federal funds and would not be offered except as an incentive to follow federal recommendations about the minimum drinking age.
