If the researcher wants to evaluate the effects of digital media on certain perceptions, for example, they could simply ask participants to express their thoughts on popular events and people. Contrary to surveys, ethnographic methods are generally more time-consuming and costly. Students can use pre-built flashcards or create their own to study how they like.

So why is research important to social work?

Ethnographic research models can overlap with others. They bring all of their data back home, where they use it to help other groups coalesce with members of the researched group.
