Nursing Management: Organizing, Staffing, Scheduling, Directing & Delegation

An international perspective on human resource management and performance in the health care sector: toward a research agenda. It also demonstrates that the organization values the opinions of its nurses.

Time management strategies in nursing practice

It is important to communicate that these improvements are intended to improve efficiencies and to provide nurses with better work environment, rather than replace nurses or to change their roles via automation.

Combating Stress

Siedlecki, PhD, RN, CNS; Eric D. Nurse researchers must develop new models of quality care that are evidence based, patient centered, affordable, and accessible to diverse populations.

Strategies for Managing Change in Nursing

The Future of Nursing: Leading Change, Advancing Health. Epping-Jordan JE, Bengoa R, Yach D. .

11 Companies That Hire for Remote Work

RNs provide nursing care in the midst of the continual trade-off decisions they make regarding the most important activity for the moment, how it should be done, and what can wait until later or not be done at all. Practitioners and organizational leaders alike have declared that collaboration is a key strategy for improving problem solving and achieving innovation in health care.

Roles of a Nurse Manager

Walden University offers programs in psychology, counseling, social work and human services, public administration, education, technology, management, nursing, public health, and public policy. Bitton A, Ratcliffe HL, Veillard JH, Kress DH, Barkley S, Kimball M, Secci F, Wong E, Basu L, Taylor C, Bayona J.

Managing and Sustaining an Aging Nursing Workforce

Although these provisions were identified through gaps in collective agreements, non-unionized healthcare organizations can adopt some of these strategies to sustain their own aging workforce. The nature of some administrative and executive nursing roles like clinical informatics management requires nurses to work with this type of technology on a regular basis, so technical skills in nursing leadership and management can be highly beneficial to succeed in these career fields. Different care settings may differ in the amount of direct care time needed by the RN.
