History of chemistry

Around 300 BC, postulated a universe of indestructible atoms in which man himself is responsible for achieving a balanced life. Moreover, his friend Angelo Pavesi distributed Cannizzaro's pamphlet to attendees at the end of the meeting; more than one chemist later wrote of the decisive impression the reading of this document provided.

The Haber process, or Haber-Bosch process, combined and to form ammonia in industrial quantities for production of fertilizer and munitions. In the same year he first determined the elemental composition of the gas. While it took three years for them to isolate radium, they were never able to isolate polonium.
