Hike Idaho's Selway

Although we had left our dogs Cody and Jackson at home for this expedition, we did encounter various life forms besides plants: snakes, bugs, and at the lake shore, a pika busy enjoying the summer plenty. This historic pass takes time to travel. In most of Bass Creek Valley, the ice was easily 1500 to 2000 feet deep 20,000 years ago.

If you look closely to the right north you will see a faint trail leading downhill. Turn right at Baker Lake Road, and hang right for the next to two forks. We were constantly on the lookout for specific glacial features, like striations and grooves, but the only spot we saw clear-cut examples was in the narrow notch just below Bass Lake Dam.
