Abhidhammattha

The third chapter, entitled Compendium of the Miscellaneous, classifies the types of consciousness along with their factors with respect to six categories: root hetu, feeling vedana, function kicca, door dvara, object arammana, and base vatthu.

Buddhism in a Nutshell

They are found in other spheres of life as well when objects of sense are perceived by the mind.

Discourse on Elements

Fifth Jhāna moral consciousness together with equanimity and one-pointedness. U Narada Oxford: , 1969.

Dhatukatha

The mātikā ends with 42 twofold classifications according to the method; these 42 are only used in the Dhammasangani, whereas the other 122 are used in some of the other books as well. A typical chapter consists of three parts. Theravada traditions also agree on this points because the kathavattuppakarana has written by the Ven.

What Buddhists Believe

A person is distracted in mind, unable to concentrate on an object. Thus Abhidhamma forms a gigantic edifice of knowledge relating to the ultimate realities which, in its immensity of scope, grandeur, subtlety, and profundity, properly belongs only to the intellectual domain of the Buddha.
