Pragmatics of Human Communication

Then the systemic aspects of human interactions that arise from the patterning of specific characteristics of communication are exemplified by the analysis of Albee's Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? Opening vignettes introduce the relevance of chapter content through a contemporary example of communication in action, exemplifying chapter themes with engaging and relevant stories. This system communicates by releasing discrete quantities of specific substances into the bloodstream. Language - and this is what Paul seems to have missed - is a meta-language too.
