It seems quite possible, or even probable, that this copy, with the Brownlow and Belton House bookplates, was given by Savage or his friends to Tyrconnell, and that this initiated the patronage to which Savage referred three years later in the dedication to The Wanderer. Curll himself obviously took a shine to the youngster, and at some point, when Pattison was preparing a volume of his verse for publication by subscription, but at the same time running out of funds, Curll took him home, and gave him a bed.
