I could never pass that sentence of Paracelsus, without an asterisk, or annotation; Ascendens constellatum multa revelat, querentibus magnalia naturæ, i. And if you will forget yourself in Sir Thomas Browne, and in his conversations which he holds with himself, you will find a rare and an ever fresh delight in the Religio Medici. These flames I feel, which in my heart do dwell, Are not Thy beams, but take their fire from hell.

Religio Medici by Thomas Browne

Browne was a seventeenth century physician. The spattering of Latin Verse, along with unfamiliar references, adding to the experience. Further, no man can judge another, because no man knowes himselfe, for we censure others but as they disagree from that humour which wee fancy laudable in our selves, and commend them but for that wherein they seem to quadrate and consent with us.

Sir Thomas Browne: physician 1605

The world that I regard is myself; it is the microcosm of my own frame that I cast mine eye on; for the other, I use it but like my globe, and turn it round sometimes for my recreation.
