Margaret Cameron & Robert J. Stainton (eds.), Linguistic Content: New Essays on the History of Philosophy of Language

Dawkins insists that the presence or absence of a creative super-intelligence is a scientific question. A difference between the two is normal skepticism is you try to get it clear in your head. Harris, who thinks that atheism is obviously true, does not dedicate much space to a discussion of arguments for or against theism.

I enjoyed it very much, both because of the intellectual stretch it was and because of the spirit of the author I sensed behind the text. Harris and Dawkins are quite explicit about this.

Heretical Essays is Patočka's final work, and one of his most exciting and iconoclastic. His specific hypothesis is that human beings have acquired religious beliefs because there is a selective advantage to child brains that possess the rule of thumb to believe, without question, whatever familiar adults tell them.

Philosophy Essay

Harris is explicit about placing the blame for these evils on faith, defined as unfounded belief.

Essays on the History of Moral Philosophy

Harris equates a genuinely rational approach to spiritual and ethical questions with a scientific approach to these sorts of questions. Evolution and Religious Belief The New Atheists observe that if there is no supernatural reality, then religion and religious belief must have purely natural explanations.

New Atheists

He celebrates the liberation of human beings from ignorance due to the growing and assumedly limitless capacity of science to explain the universe and everything in it.

You can read about his work in general on Wikipedia, so I'll just share what I found meaningful. Dawkins also says that the hypothesis that an intelligent designer created the universe is self-defeating.
