Deals of the Century: Wall Street, Mergers, and the Making of Modern America by Charles R. Geisst, Paperback

For this next chapter in the GE story, the company is planning to shrink itself by selling its transportation, light bulb and other businesses. It is dominated by four giants—JPMorgan Chase, Bank of America, Wells Fargo and Citigroup—that have amassed branches while lavishing spending on marketing and technology. A very profitable American firm has an 80% chance of being that way ten years later.
