Characteristics of an Effective School Principal

When someone wants to meet with you because they feel wronged in some way, you need to hear them out.

Characteristics of an Effective School Principal

The degree to which leaders rate themselves more highly than do subordinates correlates with diminished organizational outcomes, including reduced subordinate job satisfaction and productivity. You have to find common ground and earn their trust.

Perceptions of School Leadership: Implications for Principal Effectiveness

You may have to replace a part that is not working.

Perspectives Leadership Academy

We used data from the RAND Corporation's web-based American Educator Panels to gather nationally representative evidence of whether perceptions of school leadership practices vary by educator position. You never want to be stale.

Characteristics of an Effective School Principal

You have to be able to deal with each of those situations effectively by connecting with the person and showing him that you care about his unique situation. However, research demonstrates that teachers tend to rate principals lower on important leadership practices than principals rate themselves, and this mismatch in perception could have negative consequences.

Perspectives Leadership Academy

Now more than ever, it is critical for principals to accept the enormous responsibility and demonstrate courageous, strong leadership. Chicago: The University of Chicago Press.
