WTO

It tackled issues that must be addressed to successfully conclude the Doha Round of negotiations without suppressing the interest of the developing countries. In its 10 years, the WTO has acted as a forum in which Members could discuss their trade relations, negotiate new trade rules and settle their trade disputes.

WTO Public Forum 2006

It provided useful insights about what should be done to move forward with the negotiations and reconcile the differences and conflicting interests of the developed and developing countries to promote a multilateral trading system and overall global development. Trade liberalization under multilateral negotiations is essential because it provides an opportunity for countries to gain visible benefits from their exports and from opening up of domestic and international markets.
