The Extraordinary Photos of German Photographer August Sander In the early 1920s Sander began People of the 20th Century — one of the most ambitious undertakings in the history of photography, the project occupied Sander for some 40 years, from the early 1920s until his death, during which he took portraits of hundreds of German citizens and then categorised them by social type and occupation. Allied to this, his portraits were anonymous.

Five things to know: August Sander

She is almost luminous when set against the muted tones of the interior walls; on which, presumably, the works of her painter husband are hung

Indeed, when taking into consideration the time the photograph was taken, and the barren rural landscape in which the young men are pictured, the Marxist art critic John Berger suggested that Sander's image perfectly captured a new generation of country type. Her slicked-back hair is pulled tightly across her head and Helene grips a cigarette between her teeth. Sander died of a stroke on April 20, 1964.
