A Leaner and Meaner Defense

Doolittle's major influence on the European air war occurred early in 1944 when he changed the earlier 1942—43 USAAF policy requiring escorting fighters to remain with the bombers at all times. However, with the increase in army sizes this reliance on plunder became a major problem, as many decisions regarding where an army could move or fight were made based not on strategic objectives but whether a given area was capable of supporting the soldiers' needs. Clarification of application of Uniform Code of Military Justice during a time of war.
